

ALL THE NEWS
THAT IS UNFIT
TO PRINT

The Yellow Journal

DEFINITELY
INACCURATE
SINCE 1912

THEYELLOWJOURNAL.COM

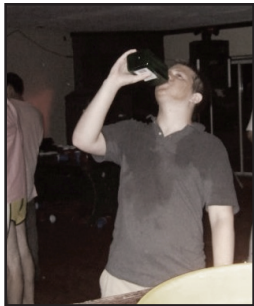

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA

DECEMBER 2010

THE YELLOW JOURNAL RETURNS!

TOP STORIES

ZBT brother admits, "Should have gone DKE"

Girl wears running
shorts to class,
(doesn't run)

Student ticketed for failure to obey stolen sign

AFTER ELEVEN years of waiting, students at the University of Virginia can finally stop holding their breath today with the return the Yellow Journal. The Journal, which traces its roots back to 1912, has often been compared to Mick Jagger: both were good at one point, but should probably have stopped a long time ago.

Over the course of its long and storied existence, the Journal has run under numerous mottos and been met with mixed reviews, ranging from "well illustrated with appropriate cartoons" to "inconsistent with the ideals and traditions of UVA". In addition to its "scurrilous and indecent" humor, the Yellow Journal has successfully orchestrated numerous pranks, including the installation of the Calder sculpture outside Peabody Hall and the election of Jimmy Carter in 1976.

But things have not always gone smoothly for the Yellow Journal. The 1920 to 1934 publication run ended disastrously following the collective loss of America's sense of humor during the Great Depression. In 1933, homeless townies on the Corner outnumbered students 3 to 1, creating enough awkward moments amongst the upper-middle class student body to stifle all laughter until the discovery of Hitler's mustache in 1939. The Journal would not be resurrected until the eighties, due in large part to the soul-crushing boredom of the fifties, the loss of all potential editors to LSD-related fatalities in the sixties, and a strong desire not to "harsh people's mellow" with "non-tubular jive" in the seventies. However, the Chernobyl nuclear disaster and the re-election of Ronald Reagan proved too alluring, and in 1986 the Yellow Journal triumphantly returned for a second run. This most recent incarnation lasted until 1999, when the entire writing staff moved to a fortified bunker in East Africa in preparation for the Y2K bug. As of press time, they have not returned our smoke signals.

Do not panic. Though we lack the guidance of our forefathers, we have entered a new age. Armed with the wisdom of the Internet, the honor of music pirates, and the eloquence of a former boxer, we have risen from the ashes. Like JK Rowling, we will write until irrelevant and then declare key characters were gay all along. Like an ex-girlfriend, we will spread rumors and publically burn your possessions until you realize we're meant to be together. We will pursue truth with all the dedication and integrity of a Chinese state-controlled media conglomerate. We are the Yellow Journal. We know where you live.

All characters contained herein are fictional, even those based on real people. All events are fabricated, especially the ones we made up. All sincere statements are sarcastic and all photos are faked, except the nude one on page three. That one we actually took.

AFTER 80 YEARS, BETA BRIDGE VANDALS FINALLY CAUGHT!

RUGBY ROAD- University police announced today that they have finally apprehended the vandals that have been defacing Beta Bridge for nearly a century. Authorities have yet to release the identities of the two suspects, but did issue the following statement in a press release Monday:

“We’ve finally got ‘em, the vandals that is. We got ‘em.”

The perpetrators, two 3rd year students, were caught painting the iconic bridge in broad daylight this past Thursday as part of a sting operation code-named ‘Slow Justice.’ According to Chief of Police Michael Gibson, the sting was a culmination of 60 years of surveillance from three generations undercover officers. The vandals were halfway through painting

“Remember America’s Veterans” when dozens of University police swarmed and repeatedly tasered them. “Guess they forgot to remember America’s police”, Gibson proclaimed at an early morning press conference.

While police refuse to discuss details at this point, a Yellow Journal inside source has revealed that operation Slow Justice was a highly sophisticated sting involving a single plainclothes officer staking out the bridge and dozens more stationed in marked police cars on either side. Evidently the hundreds of previous attempts to catch the vandals had failed due in large part to confusion over who was getting donuts and who was actually watching the bridge.

Police are still speculating how two 21-year-olds were able to leave their mark on the bridge for so many decades, but at this point they “haven’t ruled out time travel”.

FATAL COLLISION STAINS $600 IN JCREW MERCHANDISE

STUDENTS ARE mourning the loss of hundreds of dollars worth of J. Crew merchandise after a dramatic car wreck late last night on Rugby Road. Sources indicate that a BMW M3 coupe driven by a pair of vintage corduroy pants and field knit jersey polo crossed the center line and impacted a BMW M3 sedan driven by a tipped ch le cardigan and crinkled tier mini-skirt. While it is unclear how both drivers failed to notice the impending collision for the four blocks that the cars hurtled towards each other, simultaneous hair-checking and BBMing have been implicated. Both outfits were rushed to the cleaners in critical condition early this morning.

In addition, the force of the initial collision propelled a J. Crew Edition Sperry Topsider through a bystander’s forehead, soiling the shoe with brain matter. The trendy yet tasteful footwear was declared irreparably stained on the scene. This secondary impact improbably splattered a nearby secret wash button down in classic gingham. However, initial scrubbing attempts proved successful and the shirt is expected to make a full recovery.

Police are investigating whether alcohol may have played a role in this expensive tragedy. Preliminary reports indicate that the polo’s twisted cotton fibers absorbed over eight shots of Aristocrat and half a 40 prior to getting behind the wheel. In an effort to help students cope with the loss of so much style, J. Crew officials have scheduled an emergency “50% OFF ALL tees and knits” sale for this weekend. All sales will be final.

TOP STORIES ON theyellowjournal.com

MAN TRAPPED IN
NICHOLAS SPARKS
NOVEL

NORMAL KID LIVES IN BROWN

GIRL SUSPECTS IT WAS GOOD FOR HER,
BUT CAN’T SAY FOR CERTAIN

DKE PLEDGE CLASS OF
‘96 FINALLY FOUND

SOMALIAN TOURIST
TRAP ACTUAL TRAP

AWKWARD NUDE ELEVATOR RIDES INCREASE AS STREAKERS DISCOVER SOUTH LAWN

JANITORS ARE concerned about the rising number of nude elevator rides in New Cabell, which is up from the annual rate in 2009 of “one creepy individual here and there.” The cause of the recent uptick remained shrouded in mystery before University officials uncovered the twin culprits: streaking and the South Lawn.

While some students choose to circumnavigate New Cabell, most prefer to traverse the building for temperature related reasons, with “cold feet” cited as the number one deciding factor, followed closely by “avoiding shrinkage.” The rise in New Cabell streakers has been paralleled by a rise in late night grading among teachers. When asked to comment, one faculty member responded, “Move, you’re blocking my view.”

While many students applaud the new route, some have voiced concerns about the awkwardness of the experience. “When these guys came up and wanted to streak, I thought ‘sure, why not?’” said first year Amy Glynn. “It was dark and something told me the whole thing would go down smoother than that fourth shot of Aristocrat. But God, was that elevator ride awkward. I swear one guy was staring at my boobs the entire time”.

“She had some nice boobs” reported fourth year Michael Stevenson. “It was pretty cool at first. But then we just kinda stood there and I felt like I should say something, make some small talk, you know? Apparently starting with ‘Don’t worry, I’m a member of 1 in 4’ was a bad idea”.

IN RESPONSE TO FOUR LOKO BAN, PRODUCER RELEASES EVEN MORE INSANE “CUATRO CRAZY”

A RECENT FDA ruling regarding caffeinated alcoholic beverages has forced Phusion Projects LLC to reformulate their flagship product, Four Loko. The semi-legal beverage maker will continue to distribute their legendary drink, but without caffeine, guarana, and taurine, three of the four signature Lokos.

But the FDA may soon find that it’s hard to keep a criminally negligent company down. At a press conference yesterday, Phusion Projects made good on their promise to stay ahead of the legislative curve and unveiled their newest product, “Cuatro Crazy”. The company’s research division, led by an elite team of Mexican schizophrenics, experimented with a number of possible substances before settling on the final recipe. The resulting “Cuatro Crazy” will contain four new active ingredients: grain alcohol, methamphetamines, horse tranquilizers, and razor blades.

Initial feedback from consumer focus groups has been extremely positive, with testers describing the beverage’s newly formulated taste as something between “motor oil” and “the Black Death.” Most achieved a recreational buzz after just a few sips, with effects ranging from “the inability to form coherent thoughts” to “MRRRAAAH”. Phusion Projects believes the new product may surpass Four Loko in sales and plans to charge 99 cents per 64 oz jug. The drink will come in eight delicious flavors, including mango, bubblegum, Epilepsy, and “mystery”.

So far the company has brushed off potential safety concerns and multiple death threats from health advocacy groups. In a press release last week, Phusion Projects explained that though its product “may or may not cause internal bleeding”, it will “definitely get you super hammered”. Chris Hunter, one of the owners of the company, is confident the beverage will elude FDA action. “There’s no law that explicitly says we can’t combine this stuff.”

The Most Interesting Man in West Virginia...

His collection of rusted cars is rivaled only by his collection of broken hot tubs.

His racism can be seen from space.

One hour of conversation with him is equivalent to 16 Lokos.

He can disarm you with his stench or his bowie knife, either way.

His blood smells of PBR, his mullet alone has over 6 DUIs.

He once mud wrestled himself, and lost.

"I don't always drink beer at 3pm on a Tuesday, but when I do, I usually beat my wife"

"HOOS FOR CANNIBALISM" CONSUMED BY INTERNAL STRIFE

AFTER A SERIES of fiercely contested elections, the once-popular organization "Hoos for Cannibalism" now finds itself starved for funding as membership dwindles. Initially hungry to establish a firm presence on Grounds, the group's prestige declined after meetings became swallowed in bitter infighting. "Our recent problems have been hard to digest", said president Eaton Folk, "but I'm confident we can take in more members." The group hopes to beef up recruitment next week at their annual fundraiser "First Year Cookout."

PROFESSOR THINKS 'RAWDOGGING' MEANS WORKING HARD

SEVERAL STUDENTS in professor William Denson's Psych 101 class have recently noticed his use of the word 'rawdogging' when referring to the amount of work he assigns.

"I overheard a young TA talking about how he likes to rawdog his female students. I thought to myself, 'Well that's not fair! In this enlightened age of gender equality, each student - male and female alike - should be rawdogged equally'", said Denson.

Students cite several instances of verbal misuse, such as "I don't mean to rawdog you, but I'm going to have to push up the paper deadline", or

"I wouldn't complain. I don't rawdog you nearly as much as some other professors."

"Things got out of hand when students began teaching him new words", says Mary Harman. "Last week, he apologized for being sick, saying he was going to have to deep-throat the majority of the lecture. He added that if anyone was confused, they were more than welcome to come by his office for a quick rimjob".

But Denson doesn't care what his students think. "Let them shag me all they want. Now if you'll excuse me, I've got to finish barebacking these papers before 5:00".

SABATO INCORRECTLY PREDICTS WINNER OF MIDDLE SCHOOL ELECTION

IN WHAT SOME are calling a career blunder, Director of the Center for Politics Larry J. Sabato incorrectly forecasted that incumbent Clair Studabaker would defeat fellow 8th grader Shawntel Hawkins in Charlottesville Middle School's election for Class President.

Rasmussen polls conducted before third period indicated that Clair had at least a 2 point lead over Shawntel, but at lunch a nasty rumor that Clair had made-out with the ugly kid who always wears the same hoodie caused a huge surge in support for Shawntel that ultimately led to her victory.

The final tally was 178 votes for Shawntel and 45 for Clair. In addition, three people wrote in ballots for "Poop" and one vote was cast for Skippy, the janitor with the weird chin beard.

UNIVERSITY LAUNCHES CAMPAIGN TO RAISE AWARENESS AWARENESS

STARTING THIS Monday the University unveiled a new program aimed at raising student awareness of student awareness. The week-long campaign seeks to promote the struggle of idealistic students who routinely think about and attempt to solve the pressing issues of our time.

The campaign's slogan "Save the Would-Be Savors" can be seen around Grounds plastered on posters that feature extremely graphic depictions of students somberly pondering the world's problems. Planned events include a drive to collect political stickers for Macbooks and a 5K benefiting victims of too many 5Ks.

Campaign founder David Emory says that the struggle of aware college students has remained under the rug for too long. "It's great that people care about the hungry, the sick, and the poor", says Emory. "But what about the plight of upper-middle class college students who bear the burden of being aware?"

One victim 4th Year Bethany Saunders has suffered hardships ranging from people calling her annoying to people completely ignoring her when she brings up Tibet. "The world is so messed up", concluded Bethany, before tweeting an identical statement using her new iPhone.

WHAT ARE WE DOING WHILE DRINKING NATTY LIGHT?

31%-Complaining About It

10%-Actually Getting Drunk

2%-Noticing Its Subtle Nutty Undertones

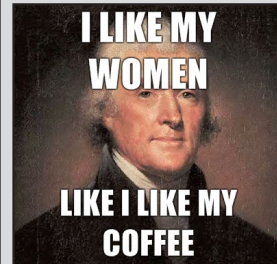

17%-Urinating In Public

40%-Waiting In Line For Another Natty Light

News in Brief

New evidence suggests that UVA may in fact not be the only University fathered by Thomas Jefferson. Illegitimate links uncovered at Howard, Hampton Colleges.

30 Chilean Frat brothers trapped in steam tunnel. Officials begin long road to rescue as alcohol and Sorority girls are sent down on cables

Forcible fondler strikes again in McGregor Room; student sternly reprimanded for screaming

U.S. forces to invade Italy: "We don't think they have WMDs, we just never get to go anywhere nice."

Local arsonist celebrates "Lighting of The Lawn"

"Townies" deemed degrading. "Local Pals" replaces term in University's latest PR push.

Ackerman Library found, "Still on the lookout for Clemson"

Despite efforts of sororities, Africa still poor

University study finds students, "There you rascals are!" exclaims scientist

dismemberment news

'Double-Swipe Dean' caught in freak guest swipe accident

*changes name to
'Single-Swipe Dean'*

AFTER YEARS of faithful and hyper-efficient service as Chief Admittance Officer at UVA's Observatory Hill Dining Hall, Dean Caulfield's double swiping finally caught up to him last Thursday. Double swiping, the controversial art of using of both arms to swipe two cards simultaneously, while nevertheless slowing the actual admittance process, had long been Dean's trademark despite warnings from friends and coworkers. The double-swipe has been banned in 36 states, but remains legal in Virginia thanks in large part to sustained lobbying efforts by the Virginia Association for the Rapid Access to Food (VARAF). Dean has personally defended his decision to double-swipe, claiming that while his ponytail was "for the ladies", his swipe was "for the children". First years consistently cite Dean's legendary status as the number two reason they eat at O'hill, second only to the food at Newcomb.

At approximately 6:35 pm on November 27th, witnesses indicate that Dean was double swiping as usual, eliminating all hope of eating before 7:00 pm. Dean had just begun his patented "grab-spin-swipe" maneuver when his right arm violently detached and hurtled into O'hill's Innovation Station, which had decided to go with stir-fry that night. Witnesses recalling hearing a distinct "popping" sound as the tendons in Dean's rotator cuff failed in quick succession, followed by a "sizzle" as the arm landed in a steaming pan of chicken, green peppers, and onions.

TA SAYS SOMETHING, STUDENT'S QUESTION STILL UNRESOLVED

A QUESTION, having been asked to a TA, went completely unanswered yesterday. Something was definitely said, and certain things were even accompanied by diagrams, but witnesses indicate that nothing was comprehended by those present. "Wait, those were diagrams? I thought that was an equation", said one student, after the query was posed and possibly answered. "Yeah, wasn't that an integral sign?" added another. "And isn't this Ancient Greek History? I thought that guy was asking about Herodotus?"

"I definitely asked about Herodotus", said a third, who had clearly asked a question about Herodotus, adding "I have no idea why he drew that map of Czechoslovakia. I'm pretty sure that's not even a country anymore".

Only one other student could be identified as awake at that point in the 50-minute discussion. He claimed that while he was pretty sure the TA used the phrase "very important" at least four times, he was absolutely certain he was dropping the class.

This week in low-res

Jefferson Society debates degree of its own irrelevance

Student receives oral sex in Rotunda's Dome Room

ECONOMICS DEPARTMENT IN SHAMBLES AFTER ELZINGA JOINS BAHAI FAITH

ECONOMICS PROFESSOR and department veteran, Kenneth Elzinga, announced on Tuesday that he has converted to the Baha'i Faith to the shock of students and faculty alike. Elzinga says he has been debating this change for years. "I have been a Christian my entire life, and according to the law of diminishing marginal returns, I am getting almost no utility at this point. This switch will allow me to enjoy my spiritual experience far more efficiently".

"Caking my body in mud and animal dyes is something I have never done before", said Elzinga. "The first time I did, the marginal utility gained was far higher than what I'd been getting from dipping pieces of bread in wine for decades now", he added, while sharpening his spear for the upcoming Goonja Goonja boar hunt. "And, the fact that the tribal land of the Baha'i is only 250 square feet drastically reduces search costs".

While he seems to be gaining a great deal of value from this choice, Economics majors and colleagues suffer. "There are so many stories in the Bible that have direct relation to economic theory", remarked Lee Coppock. "We had at our disposal questions like, 'If Bartholomew has three loaves of bread, and two gourds of wine, how many fish can he buy? The Baha'i faith doesn't have anything tangible like that to quantify. All their stories are about dirt. How do you count dirt?'"

FIRST YEAR NO LONGER BELIEVES IN 'LOVE AT FIRST GRIND'

"MY MOM ALWAYS TOLD ME, that if a guy aggressively grabs your hips while listening to Lil' Jon, you're on your way to a happy marriage", explained first year Katie Langler. Some girls envision themselves spotting their future spouse on a romantic beach or on a busy street corner, but Langler "always expected to find love in the presence of a semi-erect penis, violently caressing her left hamstring to the tune of 'Get Low'". It was reported that Langler literally fainted at Pika last night, overcome with emotion after fellow first year Joseph Stanley pulled her hair during the line "oh skeet skeet motherfucker."

Unfortunately, Langler's dreams were crushed at the conclusion of the song, when Stanley said he was "going to get another beer," but never returned. "Its just hard when something I believed for my entire life turned out to be nothing more than a childhood dream. The waists and backsides of all my Ken and Barbie dolls are almost non-existent after years of devoted playing". Crushed and still hung over, Katie Langler stumbled into the local chapter of Chi Alpha the following morning and is reportedly contemplating a transfer to Liberty University.

INDIE KID DIES, BUT IRONICALLY

HUNDREDS OF skinny-jean-clad students are still nonchalant today after the death of fellow indie kid Chance Casbeer, who was crushed by a PBR truck on Tuesday. Chance, a 21 year-old music studies major, was crossing Main Street when he stumbled and was struck by the truck's left front fender, right between the vehicle's Pro-life and "How's My Driving?" bumper stickers. Police believe alcohol may have been a factor in the collision. The driver, Axel Hazard, has thus far remained silent on the advice of his lawyer, Richard Cox.

THE HALL NOW CRAWLING WITH PEASANTS

RECENTLY IT was discovered that St. Anthony's Hall, a fraternity noted for its wealth and long history on Grounds, accidentally admitted several peasants to its most recent pledge class.

"I'm not surprised", remarked Zete brother Richard Von Vandermere. "We were considering dirty rushing a few of these kids, until we stalked their Facebook pictures. How many photos of them on boats did we find? None. Not a single one. Unless you count that poorly constructed raft."

"The signs were there all along. I really don't know how we missed it", admits fourth-year Hallie Dan Henderson. "It should have been obvious to us when they showed up barefoot, in tattered robes. But man, could those kids chug porridge." He also pointed out that they were difficult to haze as their 14-hour workdays tilling the land created numerous scheduling conflicts.

The scandal was exposed just last week, when a brother showed up to Kappa's Parents Formal with a dowry of three goats and a bushel of oats.

Admitting peasants has drastically affected the Hall's reputation, with the most recent CollegiateACB rankings placing St. Anthony's Hall in the "mid-mid" to "upper-mid" tier. This Saturday the brothers are hosting a mixer with the UTS Bus Drivers.

CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION HALTED AT ST. ELMO

AN INNOCENT inquiry by the Immigration and Customs Enforcement Department into the "questionable status" of several St. Elmo Hall brothers escalated into a full-scale investigation this week after inspectors discovered an international human trafficking ring in Elmo's basement.

Police arrived on Monday to take preliminary forensic evidence of the premises, but were halted unexpectedly by a shocking inability to dust for fingerprints. In the words of one police officer Scott Riley, "literally everything was covered in copious amounts of white powder".

Despite the four Taiwanese boys found in a locked closet and the surplus of chloroform in one bedroom, Police have cited this impediment as an "impassable roadblock to the continuation of the investigation." The Department is however asking for any related information that students or members of the community may have concerning this mysterious powder, but admit that most signs point to "a severe dust mite infestation or possibly baby powder".

Mincer's
University of Virginia Imprinted Sportswear

CAMO
BASEBALL
CAPS

FOR ALL YOUR BROVERT OPS

DG READS YELLOW JOURNAL; DOESN'T GET IT

AFTER RECEIVING positive feedback from the upper-middle class, white, male, greek demographic, a rough draft of the Yellow Journal was given to the Epsilon Gamma chapter of the Delta Gamma sorority a week prior to publication to gauge the response of the female greek demographic.

The girls asked the editors a number of questions, including, "if it wasn't baby powder, then what was it?" and "what is being done to combat the lack of awareness awareness, and can we make t-shirts?"

Despite their mixed reviews, however, the girls were happy to pose for a picture with their copy of the journal.